interpretia

Healthcare insurance

Health Insurance, in the United States, helps its affiliates to pay for medical expenses. This could be provided by a public or private source. Public ones are provided by the Government on a federal or state level, like Medicaid, Medicare and CHIP, and Private ones are provided by employers or bought individually, such as HMO's or PPO's.

Another type of insurance is provided by private companies but subsidized by the Government through the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare).

- Low-income Families.
- Elderly adults and people with disabilities.
- Pregnant women and children.

Keep in mind that some states have different names such as Medi-Cal (California), TennCare (Tennessee) and Oregon Health Plan (Oregon).others.

Main targets:

- +65 people.
- Younger people with health condition such as:
- Severe disability
- ESRD: Dialysis or transplant

Hospitals Inpatient coverage

Skilled nurses services

Hospice care

Hospitals outpatient coverage

Doctor's visits

Durable medical equipment

Medicare advantage plans

Combination of Part A & B

Dental, vision & hearing coverage

Prescription drug Coverage

Healthcare insurance

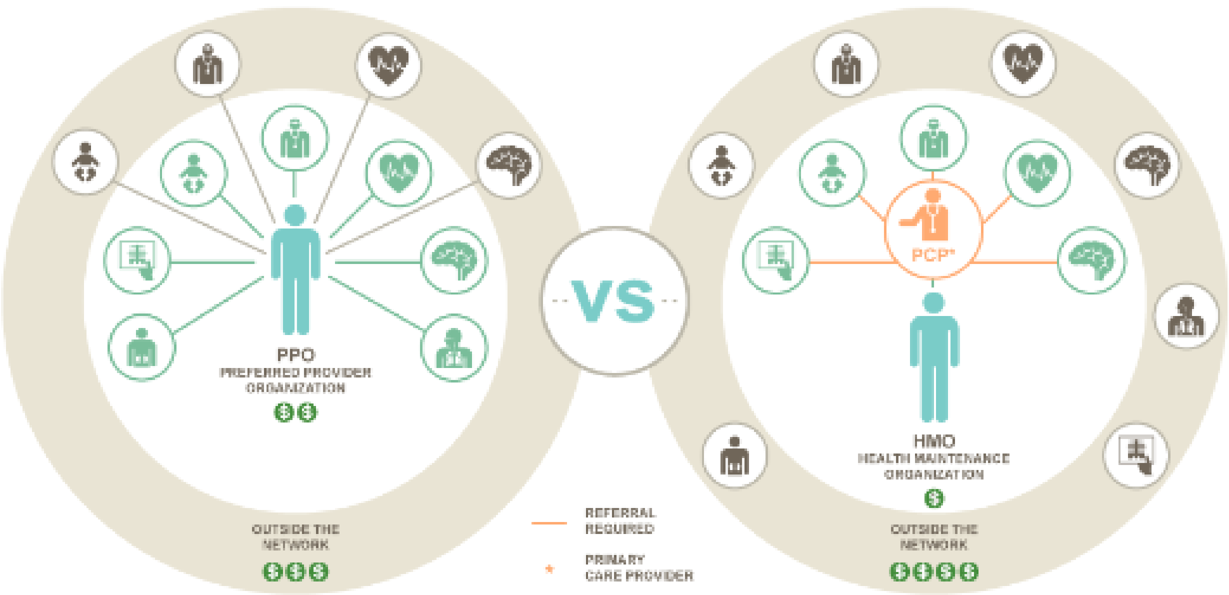
Children health insurance program

CHIP provides healthcare coverage to uninsured children (aged 0-18) from lower-income families and not eligible for Medicaid.
CHIP and Medicaid complement each other to provide insurance to both lower- and middle-income children.

Private healthcare insurance

PPO
Preferred Provider Organization

HMO
Health Maintenance Organization



PPO

1. More expensive
2. No referrals for specialists
3. Larger network
4. Out-of-network coverage
5. State or Nationwide coverage

HMO

1. Less expensive - Low or no premiums
2. Referrals for specialists
3. Smaller provider network
4. No coverage out of network
5. Network is local
6. Lower out-of-pocket cost
7. Lower co-payments