

Auto Insurance

Liability Coverage

It is a standard component of most auto insurance policies and it's a required coverage in most states. Auto liability can help provide protection in two important ways. Bodily injury may help protect you if you are found liable for someone else's medical bills or if you are sued after an accident.

Property damage may help pay for damages you caused – for instance, you hit another car or crash into someone's home.

Uninsured Motorist Coverage

This type of coverage protects you if you and the passengers in your vehicle are in an accident with an at-fault driver who doesn't carry liability insurance. It will cover medical bills, rehabilitation costs, lost wages, pain and suffering, among others.

Underinsured Motorist Coverage

This type of coverage steps in when you are in an accident with an at-fault driver whose liability limits are too low to cover the damage or medical expenses. It will cover medical bills, rehabilitation costs, lost wages, pain and suffering, among.

Personal Injury Protection

Personal injury Insurance will be able to cover some of the expenses incurred to the policy holder regardless if they were at fault in the accident claim or not, this policy depending on the amount of coverage can also extend out any passengers in the vehicle as well.

It may, also, help pay a portion of medical and other expenses that result from a covered accident. This may include medical treatment of the injuries suffered by you and your passengers, as well as medical expenses you might incur if injured as a passenger in another car or as a pedestrian.

Additionally, PIP may cover:

- Service replacement of someone injured in a covered car accident
- Rehabilitation costs
- Funeral costs

Collision Coverage

This type of coverage helps pay to repair or replace your car if it's damaged in an accident with another vehicle or object.

If you are leasing or financing your car, collision coverage is required by the lender. On the other hand, if your car is paid off, collision is an optional coverage.
