

Recorded Statements Auto Insurance

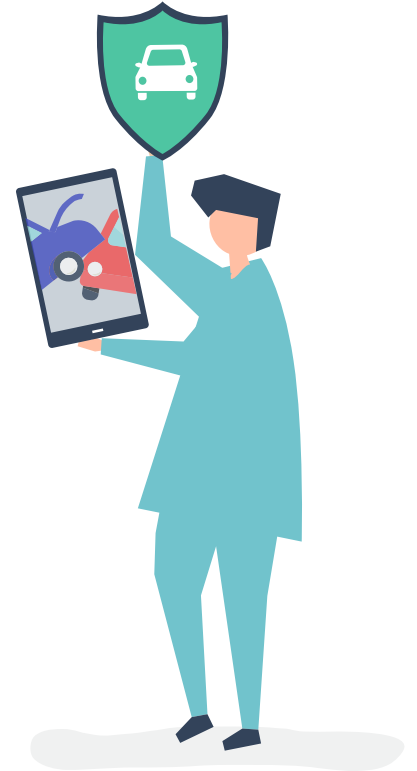

What are recorded statements?

Concept:

If you have been involved in a car accident, as part of the claim process, the insurance company will investigate the accident and gather evidence, and at some point, an adjuster may ask you to give a recorded statement about what happened.

Insurance adjusters will ask for a recorded statement as they are gathering information soon after the accident

This helps them to determine fault and how much compensation should be paid. Everything you say in your statement will be transcribed and put into a document, which becomes part of your claim file.

Why are recorded statements important?

Importance:

They become valuable evidence used to support claims of the injured party. They can be a strong force against insurance companies and adjuster reports.

They are very useful for capturing witness reports of what happened at the accident scene, without having those persons appear in person every time the evidence is examined.
