

Citigroup Training Update

Dear Interpreter,

This is an important announcement about a new disclosure and procedure that Citigroup has implemented for their Limited English Proficient (LEP) customers.

Interpret this disclosure verbatim when instructed by the Citi agent:

“Citi may have account options or offers available to you during this call. To ensure we share these correctly, we will need to switch to English. Please note, you may bring a friend or family member to the call as the Interpreter at any time. In addition, future communications for these products or services may also only be in English.”

The Citi agent will then ask this question:

“We have account options or offers for you. May we proceed in English at this time?”

Possible outcomes:

- The LEP will agree to continue in English and the Citi agent will instruct you (the Interpreter) to disconnect from the call. Follow the Client’s instructions. End of call.
- The LEP will decide not to hear the offers in English only and the Citi agent will continue the call with you, the Interpreter, to further assist the LEP, as usual.
- There may be other variations of both of the above possible outcomes. In all cases, and as per Guidelines and Procedures, listen carefully to both the Client and the LEP, follow the Client’s instructions and interpret faithfully everything that is said.

Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ’s):

Q: Why is Citi implementing this English-only process to make offers to their customers?

A: The new disclosure has been implemented to comply with CITI requirements. The offers are made in English only because all written materials related to the offer are in English.

Q: Do I have to interpret the new disclosure verbatim?

A: Yes. This is true of all disclosures at all times. Faithfully interpret every concept included in the disclosure.

Q: What is my responsibility to the client after I disconnect from the call?

A: None. If the client asks you to disconnect, please follow instructions and disconnect. After you disconnect, your responsibility ends just like every other call.

Q: Do I need to submit a Support Request when the Citi agent asks me to disconnect from the call?

A: No. An SR is not needed in this case.

Q: Will this new disclosure be added to the Citigroup common disclosures document in the LLS Libraries?

A: Yes, this disclosure has been added to the common Citi disclosures guide, which you will find in the Libraries.

Kind regards,
