

Social Services

The mission of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) is to enhance the health and well-being of all Americans, by providing for effective health and human services and by fostering sound, sustained advances in the sciences underlying medicine, public health, and social services.

Federal and state social programs, include cash assistance, health insurance, food assistance, housing subsidies, energy and utilities subsidies, and education and childcare assistance.

Some of these programs are:

Supplemental Nutrition Assistance

It provides assistance to low-income people so they can purchase healthy food. It is also commonly known as the Food Stamps program.

These benefits are given each month on a plastic card called an EBT (Electronic Benefits Transfer) card, which works like a debit card.

Women, Infants and Children.

The WIC provides certain healthy foods to supplement the dietary needs of low-income pregnant and post-partum women, infants, and children up to age 5 who are at nutritional risk.

Temporary Assistance for Needy Families. Program.

It provides states and territories with flexibility in operating programs designed to help low-income families with children achieve economic self-sufficiency. States use TANF to fund monthly cash assistance payments to low-income families with children, as well as a wide range of services.

Supplemental Security Income.

It pays monthly benefits to people with limited income and resources who are disabled, blind, or age 65 or older.

Key individuals in Social Services:

A social worker helps individuals, families, and groups improve their well-being and cope with challenges by providing therapy or connecting them to resources. A case manager, on the other hand, coordinates and manages services for clients, like health or social services, to ensure their needs are met.
